Head shows us an amazing story of how the power of a relationship with God can transform your life. Though I do not agree with all of his ideas, and I can tell his walk with God has been short so far, I enjoyed not only hearing about his step into faith, but his honest with where he is, how life with God is, and where he was. His story is one that mirrors many peoples story, and it shows how much the relationship with God can fill that addiction that we so desperately needed. That those addictions are in place of something that we know is missing. For myself it was porn. For Head it was Drugs. The unfortunate part of the book is that you can tell that he is not a writer or a reader. At times he is confusing, as to what subject he is writing about, and he moves back and forth through his story without consistency. I am not sure if that is his fault, or the fault of his editors who didn't seem to tighten up his writing to be more coherent at times. Over all I was compelled by the book. I enjoyed the fact that he wasn't afraid to say things like they were, to say things like he felt, to use the words that he used at the time, and to be honest with his heart. There are many revealing things in this book. Many things I am not sure anyone would admit doing, and he does. I can feel the sorrow that is left in his heart for some of the terrible things he does. He makes no excuse, and he doesn't say "Oh it was the drugs" but "this is how far gone I was". That to me, is compelling and I read it all the way through. The only last thing I would like to say is to those of you that may not know a relationship with God, is that it's a journey, and Head has just started that Journey.
